PERPETUAL-FLOWERING CARNATIONS.

These require greenhouse culture, except from June to September, when they grow better in an open position out-of-doors, where some protection should be afforded them against heavy rains. Stop the shoots early to produce bushy plants. For green-fly fumigate under glass, and syringe with insecticide in the open. Place the plants near the light and give plenty of fresh air. Winter temperature 55%, with dry atmosphere and ventilation whenever possible.

A GOOD POTTING SOIL.—Four parts fibrous loam, one part decayed manure, one part leaf-mould. Pot firmly and see that drainage is good.

A.M.—Award of Merit from the Royal Horticultural Society.

BORDER CARNATIONS.

These are quite hardy and very easily cultivated in any good garden soil. The addition of mortar rubbish or broken shells is beneficial. Plant firmly in October or November. Plants that have been kept in pots through the winter may be planted in March. Green-fly and thrips are troublesome. Fumigate plants in pots and syringe with insecticide in the open.
